Request Number 1	How is the utility considering equipment design standards regarding modernizing infrastructure to withstand increasing extreme weather events, including but not limited to higher and longer duration heat waves, heavy rainfall events, higher winds, and increased ice storms? For example, how is the utility considering how increased and longer duration heat waves might impact increased stress on the distribution system from both higher temperatures and higher electricity use?
------------------	---

Response:

Dakota Electric prides ourselves on our excellent reliability metrics. Our distribution system is currently composed of 3,181 miles of underground (73%) and 1,150 miles of overhead (27%) line, as noted in our most recent SRSQ Report provided as an informational filing to the Commission on April 26, 2024 in Docket No. E111/M-24-28. The percentage of underground facilities continues to increase year over year with new construction being majority underground and additional projects to remove older overhead and convert it to underground. With a service territory made up of majority underground, this prevents a significant number of outages and issues related to weather events. Dakota Electric is currently in the process of implementing a transition from wood to Fiberglass Reinforced Polymer Crossarms for grid hardening. The Cooperative has also recently reviewed and increased main feeder size for underground construction. This was done to increase available capacity as well as provide additional operational flexibility. The increased main feeder size and corresponding operational flexibility is especially valuable in high temperature situations with extended load durations, which could become more common in the future. Dakota Electric also continuously monitors our distribution system using our SCADA system. Every year, we review our system non-coincident peak demand data for each feeder. These data are analyzed and compared with our historical peak demand. The resulting data are used as the system planning peak demand for the following year. As a result of this study, changes to the distribution system may be made to relocate load from one substation to another or from one feeder to another feeder. This also enables us to review and make improvements to our contingency planning if we have planned or unplanned substation or feeder outages.
